

Self-Consistency: Structure, Tests, Two Pathologies

Not "I think I'm always right", and not "I don't care what anyone thinks"

Structure: three layers must align

1. What you see

Your read of the world. Vol. 1 did this layer for you

2. What you admit

Counting what you see into your own case — most stick here

3. How you'll live with it

The first two land in actual days. If not, they're talk

Tests: how to check the alignment is real

Test 1 · Consistency of explanation

Same ruler in good times and bad.

Rationalising drifts with outcomes — win = my skill, lose = my environment

Test 2 · No audience needed

Behaviour is the same when nobody is watching.

What needs an audience isn't consistency, it's performance

Test 3 · Can absorb rejection

Criticism can enter as information and correct you,

but not as a verdict on your right to exist

Misaligned layers = the source of pain

Much pain comes not from poverty or job loss itself, but from knowing the world changed, yet judging yourself by the old ruler

All three at once — that is self-consistency

Miss one and one of the two pathologies below follows

Pathology 1 · Inward collapse

Test 1 fails. The story follows the outcome, so nothing is ever wrong. It looks stable, but a story that can never be wrong explains nothing.

Symptom: whatever happens, you explain it instantly

Pathology 2 · Outward sealing

Test 3 fails. To dodge the verdict you shut the door entirely. The line is Test 3: the stubborn block information along with the verdicts.

Symptom: no feedback gets in, including the useful kind

Self-consistency handles only level 5 of the ladder — not the first four, and not your cash flow

Someone who can't eat needs food, not self-consistency. That never reverses.
